

THE COMPUTER CONSERVATION SOCIETY

2010-11 DONATIONS

There are no mandatory subscriptions to the Computer Conservation Society (CCS), but it is customary to ask members for an annual voluntary donation of £15 or more.

The aim of making the scheme voluntary remains twofold: to keep faith with those members who believe that subscriptions are against the spirit in which they joined the Society; and to avoid the administration load that would be incurred by any mandatory scheme.

The Donations Fund enables the CCS to provide support for restoration projects and working groups. Members have responded generously in the past, and we are grateful to the many individuals who have made a major contribution to meeting these expenses. We receive occasional special donations for particular projects – such as the building of the replica of the Turing Bombe at Bletchley Park. However, it is the generous support of individual members which enables the Society to support computer restoration work.

The costs of running Society events, including Committee expenses, are met from an annual allocation by the British Computer Society (BCS). The CCS publishes Resurrection several times a year and the costs of publication and distribution are also met by BCS. Resurrection is sent free to all members.
